

5-1-2009

Words on a Page

Susan Blick

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces>

Recommended Citation

Blick, Susan (2009) "Words on a Page," Forces: Vol. 2009 , Article 30.
Available at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2009/iss1/30>

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.

Words on a Page

Erratum

Featured Poet

WORDS ON A PAGE

Susan Blick
Featured Poet

Last summer
I ate lunch every day with William Stafford.
His voice still echoes through my mind
in reverberating hushed tones.

He spoke to me as if I were a child,
words basic and simple,
conveying the complexity and vastness of humanity, framing a window in which I could see the light shining forth from the soul of a man.

As he spoke he held nothing back and I began to see blood pulsing in his veins, letters forming angles,
sound softly bending them into curves,
theme creating every crease on his face and upright palms.

Verse after verse he slowly emerged before me from the inside out, as poets often do.
Long after they are gone, they remain,

these small snapshots in time creating an alphabetic montage of the mosaics in a life.

Fragmented and still,
breathing, the heart ever beating in these words on a page.

GRAPHITE DRAWING Nicole Barnes