Forces

Volume 2009

Article 51

5-1-2009

A Matter of Fact

Beth Turner Ayers

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces

Recommended Citation

Ayers, Beth Turner (2009) "A Matter of Fact," Forces: Vol. 2009, Article 51. Available at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2009/iss1/51

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.

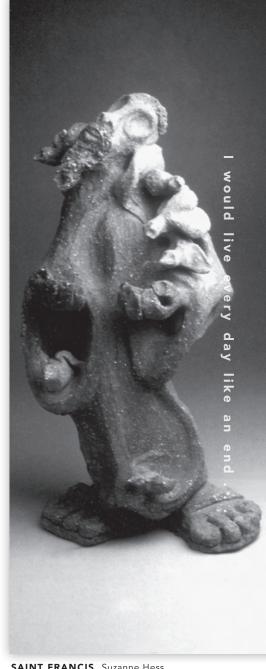

A MATTER OF FACT

Beth Turner Ayers

She wheeled him in Parked in front of my chair And left to register his presence. "I'm a hundred and two." No exclamation point. Matter of fact. Bright eyes peeking Beneath the brim of a tweed cap. No, I thought. I misunderstood. "There were four boys and two girls Looked like New York City In my family" He nodded, asserting his truth. "They're all gone now. Nobody left but me." His companion sat down I smiled the kind of smile That asked "Is he? Really?" Her eyes greeted with I've heard it, and heard it again. "I'm a hundred and two. Four boys and two girls In my family. They're all gone now. Nobody left but me. That's all right. I just keep on living.

What else can you do?"

He looked straight into my eyes. His companion took his attention. "We have some paperwork. You remember your birthday?" He spoke. She nodded and wrote. I did the math. No, he wasn't a hundred and two. Raised on a farm Forty miles from Houston When he finally saw it. Worked for the railroad For "a good many years." Never sick in his life... Well, he remembers a fever With chills, as a child. That's all. But now he can't walk. "I'm a hundred and two." He started again. "No." Corrected the companion. "You're a hundred and three." "I'm a hundred and three." He began again. A matter of fact.

SAINT FRANCIS Suzanne Hess