I Don't Know

I Don’t Know
Brian Fennig

Step into the cold and walk.
Old shoes crunch on a ground of frozen grass.
My body moves quickly but my still life bleeds and the only difference between you and me is two miles and a station wagon ride.

A.M. radio is loud with words that I will never really hear and news of where I’m supposed to be but I don’t know.

So I walk and inhale and walk toward a building with identical rooms where having a name is just an invitation to sit in a blue plastic chair and maintain a gaze that lasts for only a few hours but not quite short enough to escape tall women with brown wigs who scuff white tile with short heeled black shoes as I swagger from room to room with extended strides that say I don’t know.

Valium picks up where closing doors in B-hall leave off.
My head is down in algebra.
A bell moves my mind.
I wake and leave.

I walk home to the tune of weed-eater kazooos spinning through grass and city bus tires percussion on streets where I can’t see the traffic for the cars and I want to get home.

I step into a house and through a door and into darkness where I might see Mrs. Havisham but find the familiarity of silence, absence and solitude that I do know very well.
