5-1-2001

Death Wishes

Donna Atkins Gilbert

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2001/iss1/5

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.
Death Wishes
Donna Atkins Gilbert

I'm riveted, too; yet I recoil from racecar driving
Just as I do from bullfighting – from what I call fuzzy

Muddling of the real issue; death wishes always are.
You can't solve this so just push the limits, push the Envelope, accept a cement wall into your chest, a Nascar crashing against the cradle that is your skull, enjoy

A gore through liver and kidneys; don't you know? This is called Living. Living big. Or car chases: big men pumped up ready to use their Billy clubs. The law comes down on you if you're criminal,

Or innocently in the road behind one. Living.

I'll just say it: Or telling any lie, or never eating Anything other than lettuce leaves coupled with

Lonely running at ten, two, and four: contain this.
It's the least you can do; the slightest most you can squeeze into

Who you are. Who are you, again? Speak up, because Engine noise and applause for the matador is drowning you out,

Obscuring your voice. I swear, that big bad bull is Delusion; that cement wall neither dignity nor courage.

Bathroom scales lie like the lover with whom you thought you fell in love,
For whom you risked everything; you thought you could be in charge

Because bullfighting is cruel to animals, because racing is for egotists:
Just starve, live big, control this.