

5-1-2005

Good Morning

Sara Reising

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces>

Recommended Citation

Reising, Sara (2005) "Good Morning," Forces: Vol. 2005 , Article 14.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2005/iss1/14>

This Photograph is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.

Nothing in the Universe

The source of everything we see
is such that it is never seen.

The source of everything like me is such that it has always been like nothing in the Universe;
somehow it underlies all this;
but nothing in the Universe
can understand just what it is.

The source of everything that moves
is such that it is never moved.

The source of everything we prove is such that it is never proved.
Infinity is not defined;
Eternity will never change;
and nothing in the Universe
can comprehend unbounded range.

The source of everything that grows
is such that this is done with ease.

The source of everything that knows cannot be known through words like these.
The words can only give us hints,
which vivify and make words sing;
but nothing in the Universe
is like the source of everything.

Chad Hansen