Bobby Benefield
message for my grandfather after Mark Strand

When you see him tell him I am continuing, that his work still feeds me, that I still speak with his accent, that the body he created is a sweet machine which senses my intentions I dance on one leg while the other one sings.

This is how it will be.
If the body is a muscle, it is also a conveyance of trust.

Tell him that words are what saves me, that words are the river-rocks roiling our meaning, that by living in the center of my words, I am become them and so am cradled by the best beloved.

Say that now I honor only a voice which carries me forward, and that I hope, at the soul-spillage, to find the secret sweetness of having obeyed my fate.

Solana d’Lamant

Tell him I hear his voice in my heartbeat as it snares in my ears and floats away from me, that by being both drum and snare, I am in constant motion.

Ask him if his soul remembers leaving me here as if I know the way.
Tell him I was born imperfect, molded by imperfect hands, and so, love imperfectly.
