5-1-2005

The Red Accordian

Solana d’Lamant

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2005/iss1/43

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.
Baby was broken at the beginning: a failure - not a boy; and broken from the bashing: neck arching in its flight, head sailing like a full moon; broken in the brain: eddies of milk and opium swirling in her bottle, her suckling supplies the ebb and flow of dream tides.

In each drop of that concoction shines a crystal pleasure dome. Centered in each dome, a carousel where Mama rides, playing her accordion, it’s red lung pumping regular as monocycles, menses, milk.

Mama hides from the horror in the house behind polkas.

Pitch of note and yaw of song create ricochet rhythms through Baby’s brain. The musical warp wanders over time and scale in slow motion as Daddy, drunk, warbles from the chandelier. Sloe-eyed mother, music was her refuge, her release from broken lives: broken at the beginning from the bashing of the brain.

Air caught in that red lung rushes out like Baby’s sigh in Mama’s hug. The silence between songs leaves clear, breathable spaces-a glimpse of stable ground until the cycle repeats: regular as monocycles, menses, milk.

Solana d’Lamant

indeed
he could have been over one hundred feet tall he was so belly full of man-sized lies he intruded upon her innocent life the kind of gift
no mother wanted
he was more than a stealer of dreams when his infiltration was complete he absconded with her virtue and abandoned the innocence they created in one smooth and covert move

Sydney Portilla-Diggs

Art by Brian Cave