Even if she were only to be caught and dragged back down into the shadows to never see the light of day again— just one last glimpse. Why was he doing this? She had been knocked unconscious yet again, only to wake to a sharp agonizing pain in her lips, but more importantly to find that she had been unbound. Why, what was this man thinking, if she could even call him a man. She would have been better off had she awoken still bound rather than with this false sense of hope.

Banging once, twice, three times on the door, she gave up and slumped against the wooden barrier in defeat. She would have wept if she hadn’t cried all the tears a person could. She didn’t know why she thought anything different would happen, this thing holding her wasn’t stupid. If he had left her untied, then why on earth would he leave the door unlocked? And even if he had, she had no clue where she was. She could be in a basement or some kind of bunker, the middle of the woods or some old abandoned building in a run-down neighborhood where she would be shot the minute she got out in the open, or perhaps a farmhouse miles away from anyone or anything. Her body shook with despair and the realization that she was never going to leave this place, not alive anyway.

Through her shaking breaths she could hear the soft footfalls of heavy boots attempting not to be heard approaching the door. He was back. Her shuddering breath quickened as her whole body went cold, every muscle in her body paralyzed with fear. Not a single coherent thought was present in her mind— only pure, cold panic. Then all was quiet; the footsteps had stopped what seemed to be mere inches away from the door. The girl held her breath, the only sounds audible to her were her own pounding heart, thumping against her chest so heavily that she feared he too might be able to hear it, and the sound of blood rushing in her ears. Then she heard the clashing of keys on the other side as the door handle began to jiggle with the lock sliding easily away from the doorframe. Then another latch gave, the sliding kind that has a chain on it. In only a few minutes the door had gone from her key to freedom to another wall keeping her there. One moment a protective barrier between her and a madman, and now that barrier was dissolving into nothing.
