

Forces

Volume 2023

Article 25

4-10-2023

Dandelion in the Wind

Vera Spence

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces>

Recommended Citation

Spence, Vera (2023) "Dandelion in the Wind," Forces: Vol. 2023, Article 25.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.collin.edu/forces/vol2023/iss1/25>

This Photograph is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Collin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Forces by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Collin. For more information, please contact mtomlin@collin.edu.

14th

Steven Ramos

I am somewhere I don't belong.

We buried our Grandmother
In California
On Valentine's Day.
It felt more like a Wednesday.

What's it been between you and I?

As jets roared over
The young Father who presided.
He blessed the coffin
As we sat in silence.

Was it so true what we said to one another?

The day dragged on
Until we found ourselves
Speaking in the same room,
Sitting at distant ends.

I've wondered how you've been.

Like when your mother died
And I still had mine.
Now you look through me;
I vanish into thin air.

Another decade in an instant.

It all still remains.
But I'll pray for you,
Or whatever it is people do
When they hold onto hope.

Dandelion in the Wind

Vera Spence

